

About the Authors: Managing Cost Reimbursable Contracts

Scott P. Cook, CFCM, has over thirty years of experience in the cradle-to-grave management of multi-year, multi-million dollar federal contracts. He is an expert in federal acquisition procedures and policies, having served as a director of contracts, director of acquisition policy, a Level III Contracting Officer and a senior procurement analyst in both DOD and civilian agencies. He has supervised all aspects of federal contracting, both in contract operations and acquisition policy. Scott holds an MBA from George Washington University and a BA from the University of Virginia.

Don Philpott is editor of International Homeland Security, a quarterly journal for homeland security professionals, and has been writing, reporting and broadcasting on international events, trouble spots and major news stories for more than 40 years. For 20 years he was a senior correspondent with Press Association -Reuters, the wire service, and traveled the world on assignments including Northern Ireland, Lebanon, Israel, South Africa and Asia.

He writes for magazines and newspapers in the United States and Europe and is a contributor to radio and television programs on security and other issues. He is the author of more than 90 books on a wide range of subjects and has had more than 5,000 articles printed in publications around the world.

His most recent titles – published by Government Training Inc include:

- The COTR Handbook
- Guide to Cost Reimbursable Contracting
- How to Manage Teleworkers
- Performance Based Contracting
- Independent Government Cost Estimating
- Workplace Violence

He is a member of the National Press Club.